Stabbings in Japan Fuel Worry Over Temp Workers

BY HIROKO TABUCHI

Word Count: 853 | Companies Featured in This Article: Toyota Motor

TOKYO -- A stabbing rampage by a young factory worker is sparking renewed concern over a sensitive issue in Japan: the increasing number of low-paid temporary workers at the disposal of Japan's top corporations.

The suspect, 25-year-old Tomohiro Kato, worked at a factory in central Japan that assembled cars for Toyota Motor Corp. On Sunday, a week after his factory announced a downsizing plan, Mr. Kato allegedly plowed into a busy Tokyo street in a two-ton rental truck, jumped out and attacked pedestrians with a dagger. Seven people died and 10 others were injured, according to police.

The assailant was ...
